HISTORY OF THE CALIFORNIA STATE GUARD

□
The California State Guard was organized with Headquarters in Sacramento in January of 1941 by Executive Order of Governor Culbert L. Olsen when California National Guard elements of the 40th Infantry Division, 250th and 251st Coast Artillery Regiments, and other units were federalized. Although the authorized strength of the State Guard was originally set at 10,000, the actual mustered strength reached 21,615 by the end of 1941.

By February of 1942, a total of 13 Infantry Regiments were activated along with a Medical, Engineer and Quartermaster Regiments, a Marine Company, naval deck divisions, and a Quartermaster Regiment. During the first year of the Guard, a number of special organizations were activated but later were mustered out of service including ten observation squadrons, 1st Evacuation Corps, Sanitary Corps, Women's Ambulance and Nursing Corps, two ambulance battalions, and several provisional companies and cavalry troops. On May 27th, 1943, the 12 regiments of the State Guard were reorganized and redesignated as 10 regions.

The Battalion was established as the largest tactical unit of the Regional system, but on November 23rd, 1943, Regiments were again formed. A history of duties performed by the California State Guard during World War II fills many pages.

Thousands of State Guardsmen were assigned the mission of guarding lines of communications, key facilities, and vital installations during the early days of the war. For example, in February of 1942, 59 men guarded the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco and Marin Counties, 37 Guardsmen from another unit searched for a downed Navy airplane in the rugged San Jacinto Mountains, 61 men guarded the water supply for Vallejo, 40 men guarded bridges in Sacramento, 108 Guardsmen protected the Torrance water supply and oil refineries, and special units guarded piers and harbors from San Diego to Redding. In January of 1944, nearly 6,000 officers and men were still on statewide active duty, often with great personal sacrifice of time, wages, and careers. By the end of World War II, over 75,000 Californians had served with State troops.

In 1950, one-third of the California National Guard was federalized. The California Legislature authorized 63 state active duty positions for the California State Military Reserve. By 1952, there were 128 positions in the Office of the Adjutant General (OTAG) and 67 positions in the field organization of California State Military Reserve. Fifty-eight percent of the Military Department's appropriation was allocated to CSMR for administration and recruit training. CSMR reached a strength of 13,599. There existed two division headquarters, eight brigades, 24 battalions and 96 companies.

In 1976, CSMR was reactivated by the Military Department. The organization would eventually be two area commands, Northern Area Command (NACOM) and Southern Area Command (SACOM), five Brigades and numerous Battalions and special commands such as a Medical Brigade, Aviation Brigade, Training Command and Center for Military History.

In 1996 the CSMR once again went through reorganization. Area commands, infantry brigades and battalions were deactivated and reformed as support brigades, battalions and companies in direct support of California National Guard units. Today, the CSMR is ready and able to perform their missions in support of the California National Guard.

MEANING OF THE CHANGE OF COMMAND CEREMONY

The change of command is appropriately symbolized by the passing of the colors from the old commander to the new commander through the hands of the senior commander. This represents the passing of authority, responsibility, trust, and mission from the outgoing commander to the incoming commander. The Flag is borne by the unit's senior noncommissioned officer, whose sacred responsibility is to serve as custodian of the unit color, symbolizing his stewardship of the soldiers' in the unit.

MISSION OF THE CALIFORNIA STATE MILITARY RESERVE

Soldiers of the California State Military Reserve (CA SMR) are sworn members of the California State Military Forces and wear the uniform of the State of California. The CA SMR is the volunteer, uniformed backup and support organization for the California Army and Air National Guard. As are the Army and Air Guard, the CA SMR is under control of the Governor of California through the State Military Department and the Adjutant General.

Volunteer members of the CA SMR are subject to State Active Duty in the event of any state emergency such as fire, flood, earthquake, or civil disturbance. CA SMR Soldiers provide many vital, unpaid services to local California Army and Air National Guard units including: Personnel and Logistics Support, Legal, Medical, Chaplain Services, Civil and Public Affairs, Family Support and critical radio communications during state emergencies.

Organized under the provisions of the Title 32, United States Code, Section 109 and the California State Military Reserve Act, the CA SMR Initially organized as the California State Guard in 1940 to provide homeland defense and internal security for the State during World War II. Today's CA SMR soldiers are the quintessential minutemen and women of old, now transformed into a modern, highly effective, citizen-led military, service and support organization.
